FOREWORD

Community Development programme primarily aims at developing the individual as a whole. Efforts are being made in all possible directions to build up the rural communities through various socio-economic programmes. The ultimate success of the community development programme would be judged by initiating actions which could provide suitable opportunities for the village organisations like panchayats, service co-operatives, schools and youth clubs to take up the responsibility to look after agricultural production and other welfare programmes at various levels. Considering the importance of all village institutions, youth is the most potential segment of the rural society on whose initiative and leadership, the success of community development in coming years would greatly depend.

With this objective in view, the Directorate of Extension has taken up adequate steps to impart a suitable type of training to all the gramsevak and gramsevika trainees at the training institutions. Effective training can only be imparted to them if the Instructors and those who are directly concerned with the programme have a clear understanding about the objectives, contents and methods of organisation of youth work. As a first step in this direction, an effort was made to re-orient the instructors of extension training centres, home science wings; social education organisers of attached development blocks and selected voluntary youth leaders, with the latest knowledge and methods required for the purpose.

A brief report of all these seminars has been brought out with the id a that it may serve as a guide to the extension training centres and home science wings and other organisations connected with rural youth work to utilise the experience in conducting similar training camps in future.

DIRECTOR OF EXTENSION TRAINING
Ministry of Food and Agriculture
GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

Introduction:

In the programme of community development, rural youth will always play a dominant role as they are the adults of tomorrow. It is on them that the responsibility of socio-economic growth of the country rests. With the increasing emphasis on Agricultural Production Programme, these organisations are bound to be of greaterservice to the country. The rural youth programme in India started almost simultaneously with the programme of community development in the year 1952. Sporadic efforts were made in various States to evolve a suitable pattern of rural youth organisation. But all through this period the activity remained confined only to those areas where such experimentations were done or where the rural youth organisers were enthusiastic to build up a suitable pattern.

Every one agrees that the rural youths will have an increasing role to play in the community development and agricultural production programmes of the country.

The Directorate of Extension introduced a course on rural youth activities in the syllabus of V.L.Ws. ~~and a scheme on~~ organising 10 pilot clubs around each extension training centre in the country was also initiated in 1957-58. The main objective of introducing this course at the training centres is to provide suitable opportunities to the V.L.W. trainees to gain a working knowledge of organising rural youth activities. This is aimed to be achieved through their actual participation in the operational programme of the youth clubs organised around the extension training centres. Such trained V.L.Ws., in turn, are expected to organise the youth activities in the areas they would be working. To organise the training programme on right lines, the Directorate of Extension also imparted a short orientation training of seven days duration in youth activities at Delhi in 1958 to selected instructors.

In the Annual Conference on Community Development held at Mysore in 1959the importance of rural youth organisations in national and community development programmes was further emphasised. The Central and the State Governments were asked to encourage the formation of Yuvak Mandals in all villages in the community development blocks. It has also been realised that rural youth clubs when properly organised and developed through sound agricultural and allied programmes will help substantially in stepping up food production. Village Level Workers, the front line agents of extension service, are very much concerned in the organisation of rural youth clubs and the success of the programme will depend on the ability of these trained workers to convince and attract youths in the villages to join the clubs. This will only be possible, if the Instructors of Extension Training Centres and Home Science Wings who are mainly concerned with imparting training in youth activity and organisation of pilot clubs around training institutions have a thorough understanding and fuller experience of the youth programme. The V.L.W. trainees will have a much better and lasting practical experience in this field if in the organisation of pilot youth clubs and their programmes, Social Education Organisers of the concerned blocks and selected voluntary leaders are also associated. With this in view a series of 8 youth seminars were organised on regional basis during the month of February - March at Bakshi-Ka-Talab (U.P), Sriniketan (West Bengal), Deoli, (Rajasthan) and Mandya (Mysore) for selected Social Education Organisers (men and women), voluntary leaders along with Instructors of Extension Training Centres and Home Science Wings.

Objectives of the Seminars:

The main objectives of holding these seminars were:-

1. To provide the latest 'know-how' and experience in the organisational matters of youth club and also an opportunity to the Instructors, Social Education Organisers and voluntary leaders to acquire necessary knowledge and common understanding of some of the important club projects which could be taken up on individual, group and community basis in the pilot clubs.

2. To help the Instructors, Social Education Organisers and Voluntary Leaders develop necessary technical efficiency and leadership in the programme.

3. To develop in Instructors and Social Education Organisers scientific aptitudes and attitudes towards problems of rural youth organisation, the farm, the home and the community.

Details of Training Programme.

After a careful analysis of the problem, the duration of the seminar was confined only to seven days. The places to hold the seminars were selected with the central idea that the participants coming from the neighbouring States having similar socio-economic and agroclimatic conditions may have a more practical and convincing experience in the field of rural youth. The centres selected were also such which had fairly well organised rural youth programmes and, therefore, provided the participants of the seminars an opportunity to see the youth programme in operation. At each training centre, two seminars were organised, one following the other. The number of participants in each seminar was kept to about 40-45.

Topics covered during the seminars:

The Directorate of Extension drew a tentative syllabus for the seminars in consultation with the Young Farmers' Association and the Ministry of Community Development and circulated it to all State Governments for their comments and suggestions. Finally the following syllabus was adopted:-

I. TALKS.

1. Aims and objectivies of organising rural youth clubs - role of rural youth in agri. production and community development programmes.

2. Functional and organisational relationship of rural youth clubs with local institutions like Panchayat, service co-operatives, schools, and young farmers' Association.

3. Comparative study of rural youth programme in various other countries.

4. Organisation of rural youth clubs (including Bal Mandals and Mahila Mandals) - their constitution.

5. Socio-psychological attitudes of the rural youths with reference to their individual identity in the rural society, their interests and needs.

6. Planning youth club programmes - selection of economic individual and group projects and their follow up - Extension methods to be used in developing the club programme.

7. Developing leadership in youth club members - role of parents, local leaders, village officials, school teachers and extension workers in developing youth programme - their training.

II. INDIVIDUAL CLUB PROJECTS

1. Economic Projects in the field of Agriculture - vegetable and fruit growing, raising of grain crops.

2. Projects in the field of Animal Husbandry - Poultry keeping, fish culture, cattle rearing.

3. Projects in the field of Cottage Industries - Soap making - rope making - fruit preservation etc.

4. Home Decoration, local crafts, kitchen improvement, etc. (for women only).

III. GROUP PROJECTS

1. Participation of youth club members in Agri. production campaigns - village sanitation drives - rallies and competitions, tree plantation drives - rat eradication drives - insect pest controls and Shramdan.

2. Social and recreational projects - games and sports - one act plays, puppet shows, shadow plays, camp fire, etc.

IV. SPECIAL TOPICS FOR GROUP DISCUSSIONS:

1. Constitution and organisation of rural youth clubs and Mahila Mandals.

2. Programme planning for the club activities.

3. Evaluation of club work - follow-up of programme and maintenance of records.

4. Incentives and recognition for outstanding club work.

Methodology of conducting the Seminars:

The syllabus was divided into four definite parts:-

...... 4/-.

1. Talks
2. Individual club Projects
3. Group Projects
4. Special topics for group discussion.

I. TALKS

Selected speakers who had special experience in the field of rural youth activities delivered talks to the participants. Each talk was followed by a group discussion initiated by the participants.

II. INDIVIDUAL CLUB PROJECTS:

It has been recognised that club programmes will develop on a sound foundation only if they revolve around an appropriate economic base. Keeping this in view, selected individual projects in the field of agriculture, animal husbandry, cottage industries and home science were kept for discussion and practical demonstrations in morning hours on each day. Care was taken to see that the speakers selected only those important projects which would suit the needs of the rural youth clubs located in the region.

III. GROUP PROJECTS:

In group projects, the Instructors highlighted, through discussions, the manner in which rural youth clubs will be involved in the programmes of group and community benefit - how they can cooperate with other agencies in executing such programmes and the extent to which the rural youth clubs are concerned with organising the community programmes. Special and recreational projects were also discussed and demonstrated during these seminars.

IV. SPECIAL TOPICS FOR GROUP DISCUSSION AND PREPARATION OF GROUP REPORTS:

Afternoons of each day, except the ones which were utilised for study trips in the neighbouring areas, where devoted to group discussion meetings on selected topics and preparation of group reports.

In each seminar three groups, two groups for men trainees and one for women trainees - were formed to discuss the selected problems. In some of the seminars the women trainees were equally distributed in the three groups.

Sufficient time was provided during the seminars for presentation of group reports prepared by the individual groups on various topics.

Field trips.

Two afternoons in each seminar were devoted to field trips in neighbouring areas where the participants could see the rural youth programme in actual operation.

Formation of various committees for smooth running of the seminar:

The seminars were conducted through close association of the trainers and the trainees. Most of the activities during the seminars were looked after by committees consisting of represetatives of the staff members of the extension training centre where the seminar was held, the representatives of the Directorate of Extension and Young Farmers' Association and representatives of the trainees. The following sub committees were constituted for various functions.

Standing Committees on training:

The standing co ittee on training used to meet daily in the evening and review the deliberations of the seminar. This committee was responsible to make amendments and improvements on the total training programme designed for these seminars.

Mess Committee:

This committee worked closely with the representatives of the extension training centre where the seminars were held and helped in running the mess efficiently.

Cultural committee:

The trainees also presented a cultural programme representing some special features of each participating State during the course of the seminar. Thus this committee was responsible for staging a very recreative and educational cultural programme on a suitable date during the seminar-week.

Editorial Board:

An editorial Board was elected to edit the daily news bulletins. Everyday, two trainees and one staff member took down notes on talks and group discussions and then with the help of some other members of the editorial board, they brought out an interesting news bulletin. It was distributed to each participant in the morning on the following day.

Election of daily Chairman to preside over the deliberations.

Everyday a new Chairman was elected from amongst the participants to preside over the deliberations of the seminar. The Chairman was responsible for introducing the speaker in the beginning and closing the talk or discussion by giving a brief synopsis and thanking the guest speakers.

I. Venue and timings of conducting the seminars:

As stated above, the eight seminars were conducted at the following four selected training institutions on the dates specified against each.

1.	Bakshi-ka-Talab (U.P)	First Seminar	From Ist Feb. to 7th Feb. '60.

Accommodation:

Lodging arrangements for the participants in the regional seminars were made in the hostels of the training institutions for which no rent was charged from any of the participants.

Messing Arrangements:

The messing charges for each participant were provided by the Government of India (Directorate of Extension). The State Governments (Training Institutions) were responsible for making messing arrangements for the participants. Each training institution made excellent messing arrangements and the participants were highly satisfied.

Medical facilities:

The trainees were provided with the medical facilities available at the civil dispensaries existing at the training institutions where the seminars were held.

Library:

Library facilities were provided by each training institution where seminars were held. In addition to this, selected books on rural youth were also taken to some places from the Directorate of Extension Library.

Reports of the working group:

Three groups were constituted on the following important subjects. Each group discussed the individual item very thoroughly and brought out a written group report on group discussion:-

1. Constitution of Yuvak Mandals and Mahila Mandals.

2. Organisation of rural youth clubs.

3. Home Decoration, local crafts and kitchen improvement.

4. Programme Planning and selection of projects for rural youth clubs.

5. Evaluation of club work and follow-up; extension methods used.

NOTE: As an illustration only one group report on each topic is attached to this report. (All the group reports are being considered in the Directorate and for each topic a consolidated group report will be prepared containing the considerations of all working groups).

Evaluation of the Seminar:

At the end of each Seminar, an informal evaluation was made. The participants, in general, expressed that these seminars provide them opportunities to have a very clear understanding of the rural youth programme. They liked in particular the compositions of the seminars where the Instructors of Social Education of Extension Training Centres and Home Science Wings, Social Education Organiser of Development Blocks and selected voluntary leaders were brought together for group thinking and appreciated the joint efforts of the Directorate of Extension, Ministry of Food and Agriculture, Ministry of Community Development, Young Farmers' Association and the State Governments in conducting these seminars. They felt that such an approach in the rural youth programme will bring out positive results in this field in a more realistic and quicker way. Almost all the trainees expressed that such seminars should be repeated in future.

Future plans to intensify the rural youth activity around the extension training institutions.

From the experience gathered in those eight seminars, the following conclusions can be drawn on which action will be initiated in the Directorate:

1. There is a dearth of suitable literature on the rural youth club work. Every participant felt that publication of appropriate literature in this field was necessary for pushing up the work.

2. It was also felt that the youth clubs do not generally get guidance from varbus subject-matter specialists working at the block head-quarters and respresentatives of other official and non-official organisations. It was felt that considerable stress should be given to a coordinated approach by all the different organisations concerned with this work.

3. There was a realisation that rural youth club activity will be handicapped in its growth, if the Block Development Officers, S.E.Os. (men and Extension Officer (Animal Husbandry) and Extension Officer (Panchayat) from blocks along with voluntary leaders are not trained by the State Governments in common seminars arranged for them at convenient places. This objective can also be achieved in the district or regional extension seminars being held in the States, where all the functionaries should be given adequate time to discuss the rural youth activity. Such opportunities will give a clear picture of the activity to all concerned.

4. It was also felt that the Principals of the Extension Training Centres and other Instructors should be given continuous inservice training in rural youth work. This could be done either during their three months training in Extension Education and Communication Methods now being given at Extension Education Institutes.

5. It was felt that the representatives of the Young Farmers' Association should visit the extension training centres and help the Instructors in Social Education to organise pilot rural youth clubs and teaching of youth activities covering at these institutions.

6. Although agriculture is the predominant basic industry in which most of the rural youth club members will like to have training, rural youths will also need training in small scale industries. In order to make the club programme as a successful pilot programme, it was considered necessary that the Ministries of Commerce and Industries and Labour should be approached to provide suitable guidance and assistance in imparting training in small scale industries to young club members.

7. It was the feeling of the participants that very few film strips and films have been produced on rural youth activity in India. There is a need to bring out suitable film strips and films on this important programme. If such film strips and films are available at various extension training centres, it will be easier to stimulate the interest of the youngsters in this programme. Programme of preparation of film strips and films at some selected places where youth activity is well developed should be taken up early.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Directorate of Extension places on record its appreciation for the co-operation given by the Ministry of Community Development & Co-operation and Young Farmers' Association of India in organising the seminars.

Thanks are also due to the State-Governments of U.P., West Bengal, Rajasthan and Mysore for providing an opportunity to hold these seminars at one of their training institutions where they provided all sorts of physical and instructional facilities. It was due to sincere efforts of the state Governments that all these seminars concluded successfully.

We are grateful also to the Director of SEOTC, Sriniketan, and his staff for organising the two regional rural youth seminars in West Bengal.

.... 10/-.

The Ford Foundation and Technical Co-operation Mission, USA deserve our hearty thanks for giving close co-operation and providing necessary guidance in conducting these seminars.

Young Farmers' Association of India co-operated from the very beginning in conducting these seminars and assisting in day-to-day deliberations. We sincerely thank them for this.

The officers and the staff of the Directorate of Extension deserve congratulations for planning and organising the regional rural youth seminars so successfully.

APPENDIX II - C

Constitution of a Village Youth Mandal.

Article I.

This Mandal shall be known as (name of village) Yuvak Mandal.

Adm. (There should be one common name throughout the country. Some of the suggested names were :-

(1) Rashtrya Savak Dal ya Mandal (name of village)
(2) Bharat -do-
(3) Navnirman -do-

Membership.

The membership is voluntary. It is open to all residents of the village of the age group about 13 to 25 years, who pay an annual subscription of Rs.__________. Special efforts should be made to enroll as members all persons belong to the above age group and specially, members of the weaker sections of the community in order to make the Mandal fully representative of the local youth.

Article II.

(In order to secure cooperation of persons who do not fall under the prescribed age group, it was suggested that there should be a provision for a sort of (a) associate members (having no voting power as distinguished from full-fledged members) with or without fees. GROUP REPORT ON

Organisation of Rural Youth Clubs including Mahila Mandals.

All the members of the group actively participated in the discussion on the subject. After discussing on the following points, the group gave the following recommendations.

I. What is a Rural youth club?
II. Aims and objectives.
III. Approach to the villagers & steps in organisation.
IV. Pattern of organisation.
V. Problems in organising and running R.Y.C.

I. The group felt that a definition of a rural youth club as a 'definition' cannot be given but workable definition may be recommended. The following paragraph would serve the purpose of the definition:-

"Rural youth club is a voluntary organisation of village boys and girls (may be of the age group between 10 to 25) without distinction of caste and creed, literate and illitrate, school-going and non-school going to satisfy their individual needs as a member of family and as a member of community in relation to their physical, social intellectual, emotional and economic requirements by individual and group efforts,"

II. The aims and objectives of a Rural youth club may be as follows :-

(1) To provide an opportunity for all sided development of its members as an individual and as an active member of the community and as an important citizen of the country; it includes their physical, social, economic, citizenship and moral development.

(2) To work for the eradication of social evils.
(3) To develop "We" feeling.
(4) To develop the spirit of cooperation through group action.
(5) To improve the standard of life through various projects.
(6) To provide the members with an excellent learning experience through watching each others' individual and group projects.

III. The group realised that the approach to the villagers is the most important-factor in organising a successful Rural Youth Organisation. Though there was difference of opinion amongst the members yet the following line of action was arrived at :-

(1) Approach to the Villagers with a living faith in their understanding.
(2) Take them into confidence.
(3) A proper understanding regarding the role of youth organisation should be given to the villagers through audio-vidual aids available.
(4) Willing and inspired boys and girls should be located.
(5) Leaders should be spotted out.
(6) Leaders should be given training in organising and running youth clubs.
(7) Leaders should be imparted proper training in various projects.
(8) Formal organisation of youth club.
(9) Associate it with the other organisations like Panchayat at the village level and other organisations at Block, District, State and National levels.

(10) The selection of the projects should be based on the interest, initiative and felt-needs.*
(11) The group felt that economic aspect should be given due importance in taking up the projects.
(12) Timely technical guidance should be given.
(13) Evaluation by the members themselves as well as by interested village leaders should be done.
(14) A planned follow-up programme should be organised by the official and non-official agencies interested in youth programmes.
(15) Necessary amemdments in the programme should be made after proper check-up.

IV. Pattern of organisation:-

The rural youth club should be associated with the village panchayat at the village level as well as with a voluntary organisation at Block level but care should be taken that the activities should not be controlled and dictated by the village panchayat.

If the members and the youth leaders feel that they should be affiliated to an all India Organisation they can voluntarily do so by affiliating themselves to the Young Farmers' Association of India.

V. Problems:-

Generally the social workers face the following problems in organising and in running the Rural Youth Clubs:-

(1) Untouchability.
(2) Fractions based on caste, party-politics and religious leadership.

In order to do away with the above difficulties, it was recommended that the projects undertaken must be such as to bring harmony between the various parties.

The worker should always be aloof from party-feelings and caste groups.

APPENDIX VI

Group report on Programme planning for club activities.

-.-.-.-

Introduction:

Programme planning and selection of projects form the foundation for the prosperous building of youth clubs. Therefore, the activities selected are to be so planned that all the individuals and the group as a whole are involved in an educational process resulting in the development of individual personality as well as civic sense. Thus, a good citizenship and leadership are centred around the planned projects.

Keeping in view the above objects, the programme has to be well planned and considered under the following points:

1. The project taken should involve a change of skill, attitude and knowledge.

2. It should be based on the interest and should satisfy the needs of the member.

3. The project should be within the available resources and of the individual and the club.

4. There should be incentive either in the way of economic return or satisfaction.

5. Select such projects which will invariably be supplied by the parents and the village.

6. Select such projects for which technical assistance is available.

Keeping in view of the above criteria the following types of projects are recommended for the successful programme planning of the club.

1. Individual projects:

   1. Economic projects:-

      a) Kitchen gardening.
      b) Growing of crops - jawar, paddy, ragi etc.
      c) Compost making.
      d) Poultry.
      e) Sheep rearing.
      f) Rearing of milch cattle.

i) Tailoring.
j) Embriodery.
k) Small savings etc. etc.

2. Other projects:

a) Home decoration.
b) Growing ornamental plants.
c) Maintaining home cleanliness.
d) Collection of stamps.

There was a lot of discussion on differentiation between a group project and common or club project. Finally the group agreed that when all the club members are not involved but a selection of the club members form a group either on the basis of age or on the basis of a special interest in a project this shall be called a group project. This group project should not effect the relationship between other members.

Group projects:

1. Economic:

a) Ki-chen gardening.
b) Spinning.
c) Tree planting.
d) Hand pounding.
e) Food preservation.
f) Fooder growing and storage.
g) Poultry.

2. Others:

a) Literacy drive.
b) Recreational programmes - like burrakatha, Hari kalhat etc. etc.

A common project is one where all the members collectively work for the benefit of themselves, and community.

III. Common or club Projects:

1. Recreational:

a) Drama.
b) Folk dances.
c) Purana kal akshmams.
d) Villupati.
e) Sports and games.

2. Economic.

The projects mentioned similar to that of group projects.

3. Social Service:

a) Village cleaning.
b) Paving the lanes.
c) Forming roads.
d) Organising campaigns like Rabi, plant protection vaccination etc.
e) Construction of community centres.
f) Organising balwadies.
g) Conducting exhibitions.
h) Running grain banks.

S

Programme Planning:

1. The programme should be planned well in advance keeping in view of seasonal facilities.

2. Overall programme should be chalked out annually in general meetings. To work out specific projects general meetings can be held periodically depending on season or other factors. Each individual should be given a specific plan of his or her club projects.

3. The programme should also comprise of the observation of national festivals and traditional village festivals, educational tours, rallies, achievement days etc.

4. Planning for the training of members should also be thought of.

5. Meetings should also be held periodically proferably once in a quarter to evaluate the programme.

6. For each group project there may be a project leader.

Members of the group:

Shri P. Hanumappa.	...	...	Chairman
Smt. Kamala Devi.	...	...	Secretary
